

SOPOT (POLAND)

Close to Gdańsk, Sopot is where Poland comes to relax. And the period called 'golden autumn' is one of the best times to visit – for a stroll along an uncrowded promenade or to eat in beachside restaurants.

Sopot is refined. First of all there is the wooden pier, the longest in Europe. It is a pleasant, simple walkway into the open sea, with moorings and cafes as opposed to sugary souvenirs and scary fairground games. Much of the city's architecture is over 100 years old and has been well restored. This is thanks to Sopot's origins as a spa town, which grew up around mineral springs.
